The following text is a translation of an extract from the “Communiqué of 1 February regarding Teaching Activities on UGR Degrees at the beginning of the Second Semester of the 2020-2021 Academic Year”. For comprehensive information on the relevant legal framework and background to this text, please consult the full Communiqué (in Spanish).

1. In the second semester, the teaching of undergraduate degrees in Granada will begin in an online mode, in accordance with the established calendar, and in line with the guidelines that may be established by the health authorities, as well as the exceptions indicated in the Order of 8 November allowing "face-to-face attendance for experimental and rotating internships, Practicums, or similar activities, including research".
2. The teaching of master's degrees and UGR-specific degrees will continue to be delivered in an online mode, with the exceptions indicated in the aforementioned Order of 8 November.
3. In order to provide greater certainty and facilitate the organisation of teaching, these measures will be in place until Friday 26 March 2021 (inclusive). Prior to this date, these measures will be reviewed in the light of the epidemiological situation at the time, with a view to planning teaching activities until the end of the second semester.
4. For the University Campuses of Ceuta and Melilla, following the recommendations of the respective health authorities, teaching will continue in the same modality that has been employed until now.
